Abe's doubts seemed to vaulsh, for he made as sit down; then lee hurried from the cabin to get us something to eat. While he was gono Ben Wilkins told us that Abo was "a powahful leadah in prayer," of which we had subsequent proof, and that he was the overseer in sole clarge of "the Branch place" and "bont forty hau's." The owner of the plantation had gone to the war and his family was living at Angusta, wholly dependent for their support out he energy and fidelity of this slave. Yet from first to last he had been true to his trust. That this was not due to ignorance of his natural rights, his treatment of Bell and myself clearly showed.

In less tkan half as hour Abe retorned and led us to another and a larger cabin. The place was hulf full of wondering men sud women, who continued to devour us with their eyes from the moment of our entrance. Two women were husy before a blazing fire, the one frying bacon and the other baking corn pones. We were placed on stools, and while we were eating a young man came in with a wooden hucket full of recently drawn unilk. and the faithful black man atood before us.

He was evidently much excited, and with reason. The searchers from Sylvonia had dogs with them and they were hunting Yankees that had escaped from Millen as well as deserters. They had been over the ground to the west that day and were going to search the woods to the east and sonth that uight, hoping to come out the fires of the men known to be hiding. Abe regretted that he could not guide us that night, as he had hoped to do, but he brought us a bag containing bread and meat and two heavy knives made out of files, which he thought might be useful if the dogs came ou us. He advised us to start at once, keeping the uorth atar in front, miles off, and assured us that if we reached there we would find frionds.
We bade Abe goodhy, and at once started across the abandoned field and entered the woods at the other side. The murmur of water in front told us that we were uear the stream which Abe called "Clear ruu." It was only a few yards in width, and the bottom was hard. It flowed toward the uorth, and I inferred that It was a tributary of the Savannah, as the streams of the day beapproval hy such camp meeting exclamations as "Heah de prayah, Lori"
"Send down de angels to guide us!"
"Lead us ont oh de lonesome valley!"
"Glory to God!" "Amen! Amen! Amen!"

came of us. He advised us to start at once, keeping the uorth star in front, and as soon as we reached Clear run, about a mile to the north, to wade along this, so as to throw off the dogs if they should chance to follow. "Whar is you from?" "Down the river,"
"Savaunah?"
"Yee."

"Desartin?" "What in h-I hrings you a hidin in

Before I could frame an answer to this Bell shonted out, although we could not

"What in h—I brings you nus a hidiu "We ain't a hidin," and another rifle barrel became visible beside the one al-ready covering ns from the bushes. "Wa'al," continued Bell. "You nna hea got the drop on we uns; so if you

"An yon don't peah to hev much of anythin else." This was said with a langh, the hushes were pushed aside, and set the laws at dofiance and are rather glad of it. One of the two spoks with a hearty Irish accent that sounded pleasantly familiar, and there was a humor-ous twinkle in his gray eyes as he said: "Giutlemiu, has an me friend, Com-nodore Williams, belongs to the provest guard, an as we was sint in here to ex-

"Or yer discharges," said Commodore Williams. "I attends to the discharges, and my friend, Major General Nolan, of the Swamp Rangers, attends to the forthe Swamp Rangers, attends to the fur-loughs."

"Boys," said Bell, with a preliminary oath of great length and originality of construction. "You mus is a-tryin to be funny, and I'll allow hit's party good fur's I ken see lift. But we uns sin't got no papers along."
"Well, if yer ready to take oath that yez has lost thim or sint thim home by ost, it'll do as well, for me na Commo-lore Williams ain't the min to be hard on the bles; are we, commodore?"

I could not help langhing at the wild sense of humor of these two ontlaws in giving to each other titles that implied their dominion of land and water, which seemed to be mixed up in equal parts in the country around them. They took us to be deserters, like themselves, and we fell in with and encouraged this belief during our stay on this remarkable island. Back of the line of dwarf magnolias there was a hat, with a roof sloping to the ground, and a fire in front. Inside the hut there were a half dozen maskets, and the belts, blankets and ragged coats hanging from the negs hinted that these two men had companions in their retreat.

Bell and I professed to be East Tennessee conscripts, and, while carefully nessee conscripts, and, while carefully concealing our sympathles, we confessed that we thought the war was near an end, and that we wanted to get home to our friends. We told the major general and the commodore what we had learned about the searchers, nor were we surprised to find them far better informed than ourselves. They cooked us some diunsr, and I recall that with our corn bread we had excellent fresh meet diunsr, and I recall that with onr corn bread we had excellent fresh meat, and it was, I am very sure, either "possanm" or coon; int uo matter the name, it was as pleasant a change frem fat pork as fat pork was from the dry corn bread of our prison days.

Our hosts saw our fatigue and oar sore feet, and the commodore gave us a bark wash for the latter while the major general was preparing our bed in the lut. After Bell and I lay down, which we did without fear, one of the men made a "amudgo" that filled the hut with smoke and drove out the mosquitoes, which had been very annoying. This was the first entirely restful sleep we had had since our escape, for we knew these men would proteet us as if we were of their own band.

I recall this sleep as the most refreshing I had had since my capture in De-cember, and I do not think it was equal-struck me as not a little curious that while all these men wore undoubtedly southern in their aympathies, and showed a decided dislike for the Yankees, yet they wore of one mind—and that the correct one—as to the termination of the war. The man whom I knew and still think of as "the commodore" appeared to voice the seutiments of his comrades becausing as passives [sear precall:

Yet the near or take not questioned mach. Bell knew all about the regiments that had goue into this Confederate army from east Tennessee and western North Carolina, and I let him talk about them, which he did with great familiarity and well assumed pride. I remember that he rang the changes on "a rich man's quar'l and a pore innu's fight," and always with excellent effect.

I imagined that those meu looked relieved when my companion and mysolf announced our purpose to keep on till we reached the mountains. They made no reached the monntains. They made no attemps to concent their purpose in being hore. They had rebelled against the rebellion and they were living by what they outhoniously called "foraging," int which an intelligent jury would be likely to consider stealing. The negro was a runaway, u powerful fellow and, as we learned, one of the most useful members of the gang, for he not only cooked, but his skill as a forager was acknowledged to be greater than that of all the others put together. pnt together.
We staid in this strange camp for three of foraging by turns and never came back empty handed. During on stay the commodore, who was the leader of the gang, kept as amplied with a decetion of oak bark, which turned our feet to the color of tanued calfskin and tongh-ened them in a snrprising way, so that while the effect lasted we were not while the effect lasted we were not troubled again with hraises or hilsters. The gang seemed to be well supplied with Confederate money, and a dirtier contrency than that displayed in pulpy wads hy some of the men it would be difficult to imagine. In addition to this money they had several packs of greasy cards, the backs showing that they were composed of the remnants of many packs. Every night the cards were brought into use. Poker was the game, the commodore was the hunker, and nails of three sizes were used as "chips." Bell and myself were luvited into the game, and on our pleading poverty our game, and on our pleading poverty our fellow vagrants generously raised a col-lection that netted us about $200 each without perceptihly decreasing the wads that had been placed under contribution. I am very sure that it did not detract from their value.

I had never played poker before, but I understood the rules of the game. So, not to appear odd, I "weut into the game," und played so cautionsly that in game," und played so cautionsly that in the three nights my losses amounted to only ten dollars, a very modest sum indeed, when the smallest chip—a shingle nail—represented five dollars and a teupeuny asit tweety. At times there were several poucds of units in the middle of the blanket on which we played, and they represented landreds of dollars. Intrinsically they were worth more than the usner they represented.

Bell had a passion for poker. This game, to use his own words, "jest filled him plum full of new blood of the richest kind." He forgot his sufferings, forgot how and why he had come here and whither be was bound, in the excite-ment of the play. He played, as it seemed to me, recklessly; but he was so a scow on a little bayou a fow hundred yarda away, and on this the commodore volauteered to ferry us to the South Carolina shore, where ho assured us we should find the ground "a little drier, but not enough to brag on." When the time came for our departure, Bell generously offered to return all the money he had won, but the men indignantly refused it, declaring that he had "won it like a gentieman" and that it was his hy all the rules of honorable gambling. Then ha proposed to buy one of the rifes with ammunition and equipments, and at once our generous fellow vagrants offered us one for nothing.

To the surprise of all I strongly pro-

offered us one for nothing.

To the surprise of all I strongly protested against this transactiou, saying that if we ran into a body of Confederates we could not pleed "sick leave" or furlough if we carried a musket. "Then," I added, "the possession of a rife will make us foothordy, and we will run into daugers that would be avoided without it. Force being out of the question, we can succeed only with shrewdness and cunning."

been discussed before starting and we had a pretty good idea of what we had to do and the obstacles to be overcome. The commodore stood with a pole in his hand at the stern; I held a torch at the bow, and Bell worked a rusty tin pan amidahips. The men waving their torches on the island in adiens, the inky waters of the bayon, the protruding "knees" and drooping branches of the cypresses, all went to make np a picture of weirdness which I can never forget.

modore's pole, my respect for that doughty mariuer's skill increased every moment. When we neared the river he ordered mo to throw the torch overboard, then he substituted a paddle for the pole. The bongbs that had been brushing our heads were behind and we were out on the current of the Savannah, about sixty miles above the city of the same name. At length the bow of the boat struck the opposite hank and the commodore, holding her in position with a pole, called out, but I noticed that there was a subdued cantion in his tones:

There was seldom a night when we were not startiet by hearing from some direction the barking of a dog, and, like the ringing of a beil buoy to a sailor, we always regarded it as a signal that told of diaager near by.

We were too week to keep ep the twift pace set hy our guide, so that frequently we had to cail on him to hait while we throw onresives on the ground, panting from the unasnal exertion. An occasional glimpse of the stars told that we were meving due north, and it seemed to me that we must liave been marching for eight or ten hours, when Wilkins, after leading us siong a wagon road for s mile or two, turned into a clearing and stopped before one of a cinster of rahins whose ontimes we could make out. Knocking at the door, with a panse between each rap that suggested a preconcerted signai, a voice cailed out from within:

"Ever have any lanaces here velocited.

"W'at Ben?" "Ben Wilkins, from ovah Ogeechee vay." ''Fo' shuah?'

WE WALKED DOWN THE STREAM. "But who's yeh got long widge yeh?" This was asked after the boit on the inside was haif drawn and pushed back uguin, as if the man had suddenly disovered our presence.

At a signal from our host they ascended the creak-ing stairs, the balasters threatening to topple over at every step. We followed to a room on the second floor from which the funiture had been removed. Here the fodder and blankets were arranged into a comfortable bed, and Abe, polut-ing to it, said molocetically. The man who had let us in ruked the asines off tho coals where they had been buried, placed on them some pine knots, and very soon the interior, of the cabin was illuminated. country on its triumphant march to the sea.

Abe's doubts seemed to vanish, for he made its stidowa; then he intried from the cabin to get us something to eat. While he was gone Ben Wilkins told us that Abe was "a powahful leadah in prayer," of which we had eubsequent proof, and that he was the overseer in tole charge of "the Branch place" and "bout forty han's." The owaer of the plautation had gone to the war and his family was living at Augusta, wholly dependent for their support on the energy and fidelity of this slave. Yet from first to last he had been true to his trust. That this was not due to ignorance of his natural rights, his treatment of Bell and myself clearly showed.

In less than half an hour Abe returned and led us to another and a larger cabin. The place was half full of wondering men and women, who continued to devour is with their eyes from the moment of our entrance. Two women were busy before a blazing fire, the one frying bacon had the other baking corn pones. We were placed on stools, and while we were eating a young maa came in with a wooden backet full of recently drawn bear till Abe he comes "long."

was not the time nor place for repea.
We tried to account for the coming of white men. Abe had held us that men from Angusta and Sylvania were searching the woods for deservers, and no doubt that was the mission of those men. Bet, granting that we were right in our surmiss, we knew only too well that they would much rather capture escaping
Yankees than deserting conscripts.

The owl found a resting place on a beam a few feet away and looked at us with a solemn stupidity that was at first amusing, but finally it made us nervous, and Bell, who firmly believed that the presence of the bird was "a sartiu, sure down to the floor and I followed.

We spoke in whispers, and did not dare to move. Not a sound escaped us. Now and then we were sure that we heard approaching voices, but it always turned oet to be the whirr of the cicads it was this constant anxiety and mental strain that told on us far more than the assurance of twenty-four hours of safety would have brought us rest and relief, but once in our sleep the waking thoughts asserted themselves, and we were still flying on through the darkness, with shouting men and barking dogs close behind us.

As Abe was about to lead us to a piace where we could not incomfort and security during the day Beli, who hed no good deal of natural ability as an orator, made a little speech to the people in the hut, and aithough he iedulged in some forcible prefanity, his innocent audicnee must have thought it the customary speech of the Yaukees, for they listened with open mouths and eyes while he told them of our former influence as Yankee soldiers, and that oer present poverty was owing to enr belug robbed hy the rebels. At our back was a fence, and over this we clambered quickly and noiselessly: then, with our hands on ear clumsy kaives, the possession of which gave us an indescribable feeling of se-onrity, we waited to listen. The short was repeated and answered from a dis-lance still further on in the same direc-tion. Then followed the quick pounding of a galloping horse's feet and the vocif-crous salutations of two men, who had evidently missed each other at some rendezvous near by.

The two men, both mounted, came up dishes, constituted the farmiture of the place. Abe, the owner of the cabin—that is, if a man could be said to own anything who did not own ilmself—harriedly pulled on his much patched clothes, eying Beli and myself the while as if he had serious doubtens to our being gennine "Yankees." Beli must have surmised what was passing through the man's mind, for to set all doubts at true he pointed to man's mind, for to set all doubts at true he pointed to man's mind, for to set all doubts at true he pointed to man's mind, for to set all doubts at true he pointed to man's mind, for to set all the wish more cautiou, bell examined the man's mind, for to set all doubts at true he pointed to man's mind, for to set all the wish more cautiou, bell examined the more able to get out in a hurry if occasion required.

From their talk we learned the verne and outlaws, and that parties of the road at a walk and talking as if each thought the road at a walk and talking as if each thought the road at a walk and talking as if each thought the road at a walk and talking as if each the own in the road at a walk and talking as if each the road at a walk and talking as if each the own in the road at a walk and talking as if each the own in the road at a walk and talking as if each the own in the road at a walk and talking as if each the road at a walk and talking as if each the own in the road at a walk and talking as if each our being gemine "Yankees." Bell must have surmised what was passing through the man's mind, for to set all doubts at rest he pointed to my ragged jacket with its yellow facings and said:

They took us to be deserters, like themselves, and us to be deerters, like themselves, and we feil in with mud encoaraged this belief during our stay on this remarkable island. Back of the line of dwarf magnetias there was a lut, with a roof sloping to the ground, and a fire in front. Inside the lut there were a half dezeu muskets, and the belts, blankets and ragged coats hanging from the pegs hinted that these two nach hed companions in their retreat. ions in their retreat.

Bell and I professed to be East Tennessee conscripts, and, while carefully concealing our sympathies, we confessed that we thought the war was near an end, and that we wanted to get home to our friends. We told the major general and the commodore what we had learned about the searchers, nor were we surprised to find them far better informed than ourselves. They cooked us some dinner, and I recall that with our corn bread we had excellent fresh meat, and it was, i am very sure, either "'possnm" or coon; but no muster the nam it was as pleasant a change from fat-pork as fat pork was from the dry corn

Our hosts saw our fatigue and our sore feet, and the commodore gave us a bark wash for the latter while the major gen-eral was preparing our bed in the int. After Bell and I iay down, which we did After Bell and I lay down, which we did without fear, one of the men made a "snuadge" that filled the hut with smoke and drove out the mosquitoes, which had been very aunoying. This was the first entirely restful sleep we had had since our escape, for we knew these men would protect us as if we were of their own band.

I recall this sleep as the most refreshing I had had since my capture in Deling I had a capture in Deling I had had since my capture i

I was the first to wake up, and, with the cantion born of contact with danger, I rubbed my eyes and listened quietly to the sound of voices that had disturbed me. It was dark, but the fact that there was a group of men esting about the fire before the hit told me that it was either very early in the morning or rather late in the evening, and I deelded that it was the latter. By rising on my elbow I could look across Bell and see the men cooking and eating about the fire. A stalwart negro, with a shiny face and the merest apology for a shirt, was doing the cooking, while the major general and the commodore, with three other white men, were doing the cating. One of the newcomers sat with a paper in one haad and his back to the light, and while he helped himself with the other hand he read and made comments something like this:

"The Ckronicle does so lie, no one can't hardly believa it when it tells the truth, hut I reckon it ain't far wrong bottom folks and the Ysaks. Jest listen to this, boys: '80 far in this campaign every move made by Sherman has been so the men or feet were "about healed." The negro was a rucaway, a powerful fellow and, as we icarned, one of the most useful members of the gang, for he not only cooked, but his skill as a forager was acknowledged to be greeter than that of all the others

We staid in this strango camp for three orights, during which time the mea went off foraging by turns and never came back empty handed. Daring our stay the commodors, who was the leader of the gang, kept us supplied with a decoction of oak bark, which turned our feet to the color of tanued ealfskin and tough-ened them in a surprising way, so that while the effect lasted we were not troubled again with braises or blisters. The gang seemed to be well supplied with Confederate money, and a dirtier currency than that displayed in pulpy wads by some of the mea it would be wads by some of the mea it would be difficult to imagine. In addition to this mouey they had several packs of greasy cards, the backs showing that they were composed of the remnants of many packs. Every night the cards were brought into use. Poker was the game, the commodore was the banker, end nails of three sizes were used as "chips."
Bell and myself were invited into the Bell and myself were invited into the game, end on our pleading poverty our fellow vagrants generously raised a col-lection that netted us about $200 each without perceptibly decreasing the wade that had been placed under contribution.

I am very sare that it did not detract from their value. from their value.

I had never played poker before, but I naderstood the rules of the game. So, not to appear odd, I "went into the game," and played so cautionsly that in the three algbts my losses amounted to only ten dollars, a very modest aum indeed, when the smallest chip—n shingle nnil—represented five dollars and a teepenny call twenty. At times there were several pounds of nails in the middle of the blanket on which we played, and they represented hundreds of dollars, lutrinsically they were worth mere thue the paper they represented.

When the time came for our departure, Bell generously offered to return all the money he had won, but the men inlignantly refused it, declaring that he had "won it like a gentleman" and that it was his by all the rules of henorable gambling. all the rules of benorable gambling. Then he proposed to bny one of the rifles with ammunition and equipments, and at once our generous fellow vagrants offered us one for nothing.

To the surprise of all I strongly protested against this transaction, saying that if we ran into a body of Confederates we could not picad "sick ieave" or furlough if we carried a musket.

"Then," I added, "the possession of a rifle will make us foolhardy, and we will run into dangers that would be avoided without it. Force being out of the question, we can succeed only with offered us one for nothing question, we can succeed only with brewdness and cuming."

The awamp angela, and, finally, Beil, agreed that i was right, and so we took no gun, though one of the men said, "Thar's times when nothing else is so handy eas gun, though I'll ailow that the mun ea ain't got a gun is least ept to git into sich scrapes." git into sich scrapes."

The commodore stood with a pole in his and Beli worked a rusty tin pan amidships. The men waving their torches on the island in adieus, the inky waters of the hayou, the protruding "keees" and drooping branches of the cypresses, all went to make up a picture of weirdness which I can never forget. As we wound in and out, propelled along the tortuous course by the commodore's pole, my respect for that doughty mariner's chill increased every moment. When we neared the river he ordered me to throw the torch overboard then he substiluted a paddle for the pole. The bonghe that had been hrushing our heads were belind and wo were out on the current of the Savanush, about sixty miles ebove the city of the same name. How the commodore made his way across that black river that black night was no doubt well known to himself, but it must ever remain a mystery to me.

At length the bow of the bont struck the opposite bank and the commodore, holding her in position with a pole, called ont, but I noticed that there was a subdued caution in his tones: "Jninp, boys, jimpl Better etay right where you are till daylight, then cut dirt. Goodby!"

We repeated "goodby" und jumped out, carrying with us some provisions which the black man and the major genand then we sat down to wait for day with the generous swamp angels. With our backs against a tree we dozed off. I am very sure I slept, for it seemed to me only a very short time between the departure of the commodere and the com ing of daylight.

As soon as it was light enough to see we started northwest through the swampy woods, still carrying our hoots, though our feet were now so tough tha I feit we were burdening ourselves with a useless lond. Here, as on the opposite side of the river, the ewamp water was produced an annoying titillation in the throat. I realized that it was like drinking ln maiaria, but the heat was so in ense that we could not resist the thirs t produced.

I had been standing by all this time, wondering how the dence the fashlomable Frank Holden knew anything about this girl, and what he wanted to see her for. I now joined in the conversation, and stepping forward interrupted Lizzle, and said, "Excuse me, Mr. Holden, but as I happened to be at Jordan & Marsh's when Miss Mason fainted, perhaps I cau give you the information you desire." He recognized me and thanked me, though at the same time I could see that he was annoyed at my presence.

"The illiness is nothing to be alarmed at or startied about," I said, "merely a sittle fainting attack, the result of ushock; she must be much better, as she has gone

"All, except about the young man I forgot that till just now."
"Good. Say nothing about it to any one. Good night."
I left him and walked rapidly in the direction of the hotel that Miss Ormsby had gone to; then I changed my mind and decided to wait for her on the road to the emetery.

and decided to wait for her on the road to the cemetery.

I was not long in finding a place convenient for my purpose. A thick clump of trees growing near the roadside at once afforded me a secure retreat and a position from which I could watch all who passed by without being seen myself.

It was hy this time nearly ten o'clock, and the road was deserted and lonely, it had been hright moonlight, but some thin gray clouds were drifting across the sky, and every now and then would obscure the face of the moon. Before me the broad, dusty road stretched away to where the white gravestones of the cemetery shone on the hill side. It was a warm, snitry night, and wearied by my exertions I found the cool shade of the trees vary pleasant.

She was corregably searching energy nook and corner of a small lot.

Eight o'clock found me before her house, clad in my dress suit and otherwise equipped for an evening call. In front of the door stood a carriage, evidently waiting for some one. It now only remained to send a hit of purple on the day that Holden sent the red ribbon, und so arrange matters that the shop girl should have several hanns at her disposal before hor lover could discover the trick.

Miss Ormsby did not care to take the package herself for fear that she might be recognized, and meeting me used me as the reader knows.

One of the less audiences ever, gathored in tidd Fellows' Opera House sat in front of the curtain last night and listened to the piano sedos of Arthur M. Raymond while behind the scenes arrangements were being made for the first act in Little Ho-Peep, which was to be given under the anaplees of the luasmuch Circle of Kings Daughters. The forty or more particlemnts in this charming operetta had been especially drilled and prepared by Mrs. Frank Drew and Miss Susie Blaymond, both of whom have been multing in their efforts to make the affair a success, and were rewarded with a districture sylvebry, bath timancially gad as a musical and artistic success.

Berta Raymond as Little Bo-Peep won well mestical applantse especially in the second and third acts.

Florence Bates with her rich voice was onlice pleasing as Netticot; the Misses Tinyer, Rose, as Lady Lea, and Hattle as Mistress Mary, lost nothing Irmu u previously well carned position as favories.

Elia May Kaymond as Gill had quite a lard part to ill but it was well done, Ethel Raymond and Edna Wossi as Cockle Shell and Silver Relie enhanced the judicresque group very nuch and added materially to the dinal tableau.

The shotgun gave him a decided advantage; but I could see by his eyes that he would not dare to use it, except in self defense. Suddenly his manner changed, und he said: "I, perbaps, should not doubt the story yon gentlemen tell, but you can see that in these times we cannot rely on the statement of every etranger. Beil and I were fresher and stronger than we had been at any time since our cascape. Our feet were so tough that we preferred to carry our old boots shing over our shoulders. We knew that it we did not go to the house that the man whom we had just met and his friends would soon be searching for us, and that ear only hepe fay in getting away from this plantation as soon as possible. Between the cotton field and the house we tarned shurply to the west till we came to mood that extended back to the swamp through which we had come that moreing, then we broke into a double quick and kept on till the sun sank down behind the forest wali.

Just before dark we strack a road deading in the right directice, and heuring voices ahead we concenled ourseives till a party consisting of a white man and a number of black men passed. We could hear all they said, and learned that there "never had been a year since de walh when de cetton was so powahful bad in do grass." We started on again, seeing no occasioeal light, yet dreading to investigate its source, mid quickening our pace every time we heard the barking of n dog, for we feared that the home in the sound of the double were oble to pay, but having began with one story it was necessary to stick to it.

It was not till midnight that thostmin began to be seriosaly feit. This sky clouded over, and as we could hear no sound of pursuit we decided to go to sleep in the woods through which we were then moving. Pradence would have dictated our reating by turns, but we were both so tired out that we dropped off to sleep ut the foot of a tree with we were discussing the propriety of standing guard?

When we woke up it was to that day brenking and the rain pouring down in the sleady way that indicated a wet day lit must have been raining for hours, for light of the cooking on Bell paid in advance, and, when Mr. Dillard acgrested that we rest till uext day and said that he would cobbour so to us, we readily agreed. He made us up a bed in the adjoining section of the cabin, and, as Bell felt in bounding guard?

When we woke up it was to that day brenking and the rain pouring down in the sleady way that indicated a wet day light a barning hanger, there is nothing against like a bed that banishes fainteen the sleady way that indicated a wet day light a bed that banishes fainteen the sleady way that indicated a wet day.

Min further informed me that she was 'goin to git married" when she was 'nigh bont sixteen, ef so be the Yankees don't kill off all the men." And she seemed quite comferted when I told her that I had no wife, and that I might come down to see her again when I got my best clothes and she was "nigh 'be sixteen." Since that time I have played with the children of the Navajoes, Utes with the children of the Navajoes, Utes and Mojaves in their own villages, and I fend them quite as enlightened as these interesting little white savages of the South Carolina pine lauds.

Late in the afternoou Mr. Dillard retorned, bringing writing materials and also a butternnt cont, which, in addition also a butternnt cont, which, in addition to being several sizea too large, had seen service before. That uight two men, who looked enough like Mr. Dillard to be his twin brothers, came to the hense, and we fennd them like our host very much down on the Yankees, and still more hitterly epposed to the war and the men who brought it on. They had yague stories about great hattles in vague storiea abont great hattles in Georgia and Virginia, and a man over at Allendale had told Mr. Dillard that who had been exempted from army duty beenuse of their negroes.

"Et so be," he said, as near as i can recall, "I was n makin fo' the Blue Ridge, I wouldn't go neah no large towns lika 'Gusta, fo' them's chack foll of fellers playin sojers. I'd stick to the country. I'd find ont what plantations had the best hosses or mnles, an as I prefer to ride rather than to walk, I'd do us most sojera do, an that is take a critter most sojera do, an that is take a critter when I wanted ooe. Of course it wouldn't be wise to bang on to the same

This man was regarded by his friends as a great travelor. He had been down the river to Sayannah, and he had also ing to Aiken, and we were assured by Mr. Dillard and his frieods that if we kept on the tracks indicated and did not put up at the larger plantations that we might trast the poor whites, "fo' they was our own kind of folks." This advice was certainly good and action on it we was certainly good, and acting en it we passed through Alken, Edgetteld and tio the Abbeville district. We met nany deserters on the way, and the use with whom we spoke were all coavinced that the south was whipped. if the de-moralization and desertions were as great in other parts of the south, and is am inclined to think they were, it is ccrtain that the southern men hastened the

On the night, or rather early morning, of Jaly 7 we were centeated in a dense wood between o place called Lowinies-ville and the border of the Anderson district, whost three miles from the Savnn for about sixteen hoars, and made up our united to rest before going on. We lay down in a deserted cabin, that must have been used at one time by hunters, for there were plenty af "hirds" in that section. We had not yet dropped off to sleep when we were startled by hearing the transping and snorting of horses, and looking out through the chinke of the cabin we saw six well moonted, well armed men approaching. They came directly to the cabin, as if sure that the parties they were in search of were se-creted there. Relning in, one of the men halted before the opening, and with his curbiee thrown into the hollow of his bridle arm he shouted:

"Heilo, in therol" i came to the opening, and, with as much boldness as i could assume, I asked the man what he waated. "We want all you fellows to come on and surrender," he said. Bell came to my side, and together we stepped out.

"There's more in there!" persisted the man, who appeared to be in command.

We invited him to search for himself, which he at oace proceeded to do.

WHO BELLEVE US TO BE HORSE THIEVES.

The fact that the horsemen searche the cabin convinced Bell aed myself tha we were not the men they were looking prospect look brighter Our situation and that our captors were not prepor sessed was evident from their outlis aed scowling faces. Before our escape from Millen we decided on the story we should tell once we got away and stick to it without any variation. To prove that he meant hasiness, that man—his name was Holland—flung himself from the saddle, and the others followed his example. Bell did not qualify indeed, there was that in his manner that alarmed the horsemen. He atrode toward Helland and, looking him full in the eyes, prefaced his introductory speech by inferming the fellow that if his dared to intimate that either of us was horse thief he lied like a sneak and the truth was not in him, and, further, that if he (Helland) was not the biggest coward that ever wore a beard he would either apologize ar else give the man he had so grossly insuited an equal chance to prova his henar and his coorage. This bold course had an excellent effect, and Bell was quick to see it. Turning to the other men, with a manner that indicated he course had an excellent effect, and Bell

And new I seemed to side with Hol-tand. I assured him that his precaotion was right and reasonable, but I urged at the same time that it was hard for men who were good soldiers, and who had been wounded and jost their health in the service, to be treated like deserters and thieves. Every day's delay shortat Allendale had told Mr. Dillard that thickness the man was thought to be roliable, as the man who teld it had seen it "with his own eyes" in a Columbia paper.

The coontry we passed through was known as "the Calhorn settlomeat." It had been the home of the great Nullifier, and so might be called "the cradio of secession." We extinguished the hartern and man blead to be led in the tern, and again I had to beg Bell act to burden himself with a rifle, and ho agreed, with a sarly oath. There was no time for discussion, no need to speak. Barefooted, we harried from the stuide and made for the north west, and fortunately we were right a west, and tortunately we were right as to the direction. It was not till we had gone about half n mile from the honse, stopping now and then to listen, but without hearing any sharm, that we broke late a run. It was not the flight n gait that, auder the circumstaeces, we could have uniutaned for a day— It was about 12 o'clock when we left the stable, so that we had live bours of darkness, and we determined to use it. After supper Mr. Calhonn and the guards came oot and smoked and talked with the greatest freedom about the war. They were very certain that Lee had the best of it in Virginia, and they made np our minds to recross into Georgia.

Just befere daylight we came to a halt on the banks of a stream, which we heped was the Savannah, and waited for daylight. When light came, the width and character of the river convinced us we were right, but it needed no soundings to assure me that it could not be forded at that point. We hed to act and think quickly. We found a drift log on the shore to which Bell could cling, and without hesitation we hanched it and pushed out. I do not think lever met a man with more physical conrage than my companion, but his ashy face and the nwful look in his eyes as he clung to that log, while I

The nudertaking was not difficult, but when i reached n point where it was safe for my friend to drop down his legs and abandon the log, we both sent ap a fervent "Thank tool!" The Georgia shore we a rocky and wooded, and we at once harried to a position from which we could not be seen from the South Carolina side. We wrung out our clothes, and after finding that the woods afforded many places for concealment we decided to remain there till dark. As we were pretty well fagged ont, and nothing was to be galued by stunding nething was to be galued by standing guard, we made a couch of bongbs in the midst of a great pile of rocks and slept till inte in the afternoon, by which time one fatigue had gone and we were as hungry as wolves.

a smoke pillar that indicated a house. Walking mlong the fence we came to a road leading toward the house, bot the deep, bell-like baying of degs in the disand made as run back to the woods again. After centiading that the dogs direction. We met a wagon and a num-ber of horsemen, but we took care that they did not see ne.

About midnight we uset a man on foot who was very drunk, and seemed to have lost his horse and his bearings. He teld us that he had been a soldier, "the best sojer ever sent oat by this here county of Elbert er the whole atsate of for about ten or fifteen miles we should fetch up at Montevideo, bot he proposed that we should see him home, when he would trent us like gentlemen and send would trent us have gentlemen and send in tenin with ue as far us Hart on the morrow. We thankfully declined, and left the gentleman singing "The South-ern Wugon" beelde the rond. By way af appeasing oor hanger wa drank at every stream we came to, and when the cecks began to crow Bell was sorely tempted to find their roosting place. The dawn af another day foand relieved by an elderly man, who came provided, in addition to his rifie, with a book and a lautern. During the day we got a good idea of covering the day we had tasted foot and the book and a lautern. band It was thirty-six bours since we had tasted food, and daring that time we had traveled a distance estimated at seventy miles. This would have taxed strong, healthy men, bat we were weak to start with, and the terrible strain and privatian were not calculated to improve our vigor. We both had "flashes" ager," but the determination to win o "to die a-tryin" kept us at it and ronse ns to effort when our feet felt like gress burdens that could not be lifted again and we reeled and staggered through the darkness like drunken men.

The light in the east warned as to find another hiding place for the day, and we burried toward the nearest woods. Thoroughly exhausted and with the hunger burning our vitat, again, as it had done at Libby und Charleston, we tot-tered into the naderbrush and luy down like funished wolves. We were reased from our sleep by feeling ourselves pushed, and starting ap we found our selves in the midst of n half score of those long nosed, razor backed hogs to be found no place outside of southern Bell sprang to his feet with his knife in his hand, but before he could strike the wild black creatures were off in a state of great alarm. "We one most have grab," reasoned Bell, "and I'm in might us well be killed as starved to death." I agreed with him in this, and we started off to find a house that did act look too rich and forbidding [TO BE CONTINUED.]

Amongst nil the notable women who have been in Hoston the past week the most notable perhaps is Lady Honry Som-erset, of whom I want to tell you a little as I had the pleasure of mosting her quite informally.

Her hair is dark and slightly wavel above a broad smil thoughtful brow, while ier dark eyes have a pathetic look which s decidedly attractive, Her complexion is rather dark, last tinged with pink—which she owes to the logs of het native land—and her smile is as weet and unaffected as a chlid's.

And if in his narowness he still despised the so-called emancipated woman in general, he could not help acknowledging that here at least was one lady who dignified the position of public speaker and worker. There is occordingly no doubt whatever that Weymouth was the oldest actifel place in the original colony of Massachusetts Bay; and, noxt to Plymouth, is the oldest actifed place in what is now the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Originally selected, about the middle of May, 1922, for the site of a plantation by those sent out by Thomas Weston, it was occupied by Weston's company in the following Angust. Eoely in April, 1623, those composing the plantation, having in the ling Angust. Eoely in April, 1623, those emposing the plantation, having in the currae of the Winter faileu into great straits, Miles Standish went to their assistance from Plymonth, and there on the 6th of the month, aevording to the revised calculur, had his bloody tight with the indians, resulting in the killing of Peckanot and Wituwamut. Wessagnsset was then wholly abandoned, but "the pain and bouses," to use ithe expression in Winslow's "Good Newes" (Young's Chron. of Pilg, 34th had not been destroyed by the savages, and they were occupied by Capt. Shall we Add to Weymouth's Attractions The paper prepared by Charles Francis Adams, Esq., and printed in fall on the lirst page of this Issue of the Gazette, is very interesting reading as is also his let-ter to Mr. John J. Lond, of this town, upon the same subject and wherein he recommends the Historical society to take action In regard to securing for public purposes the scene of the first settlement on Massa chusetts, Bay, and the creetion of a moon neut to mark the spot and commemorate the event.

It would be eminently proper for the town to make an appropriation for this purpose and, as Mr. Adams suggests, it is quite likely that the state might be prevalled upon to assist. There is still another way in which the object could be secured and that is by popular subscription, if such a plan shall be deemed best the Gazette will be glad to do all in its power to assist by receiving subscriptions and printing the list from week to week.

We commend this matter to our leading citizens and hope some action will be taken homediately toward the preservation of tlds most important and beautiful historic

It is the only sure remedy yet discovered for Consumption, and is Nuture's own. By inhalation all diseases of the respiratory organs are originally caused; and it is by inhalation that they can be effectually cured. Consumption, that bene of the human family, has, for the first time, found its match and master in AERATED OXYGEN; which bathes the million lung cells and all the air passages leading to them with the balm of its soothing vapor; destroys the life-infesting germs in their stronghold; expels all effete matter from the debilitated system; and at once begins the desired work of renovation in blood and nerves. AERATED OXYGEN is the marvel cure in cases of Consumption.

Washington Letter.

Most people suppose that it is the soltest kind of a soft "snap" to work for the United States Government, but such is not always the case, as one poor woman knows by sad experience. The woursu in question received an appointment in the big repair shop of the post-office department, WHERE ALL THE TORN MAIL BAGS ARE SENT last pay day. The pay of the women in this shop is $34 a month, but they are required to repair an average of thirty-eight bags such day or iters is deducted 3% cents for each bag short of the average. It is lso fair to state that the rules also provide age. Alter working seven days, harder perhaps than she ever worked before in her life, this woman received the munificent sum of $1.3t. Nice sort of a "snap" that! It is claimed by those in charge of this shop that there is no favoritism. In the giving out of the bags, and that it requires no skill to do the work. This may be true, but it is difficult to reconcile with a state-ment made at the same time that widle this oor woman earned $1.39, other women working at the same rate of pay earned $13 and $13 each. If there is no favorition, me of the women must be lucky enough o get bags that require but little work

That night we encamped in a lovely little valley through which flowed Silver run, a tributary of Hudson's fork, which in its turn le a tributary of the Savannah. I slept with Sim Sleigh and Bell with McNeil, the other driver; but as we sat about the fire before lying down, it was evident that the other driver was quite in accord with mine. It surprised me then, and the surprise increases as I think it over after all these years, that the Confederacy—rotten within and hammered remorselessly from without—last-ed as long as It did. And yet, with all the discontent of these drivers, if the Yankees had attacked our little camp that night I am certain they would have defended their charge as bravely as if their hearts were entirely given to the war. It was the savage pride that refuses to acknowledge defeat that kept these heroic men fighting after the principles with which they began were lost sight of and the cause that called them out was ratirely hopeless.

About noon of the second day, and just as Sleigh, who was now in the lead, was looking shead for a place where he could rest the animals for an lour and cook diager, a wonny man with one har.

And whether the skies are dark er bins, With stars or storms above me, My life will shine with the thought of you— You love me, dear, you love me!—Franklin L. Stanton.

Reality for Mo. I have a modest sweetheart, Who has not traveled much, But loves the scenes around her With fancy to retouch.

Does some grim juil tower o'er us, My sweethenri crouches low. She is dear little Dorrit With heritage of woe. Or if by chance we're strolling Through any hit of wood She peoples it with archers, And I am Robin Hood.

One night we two were passing
A factory chimney high;
A shower descended on us
Of cinders het and dry.

The smoke clouds surged around us, The soot, like rain, came down. Cried 1: "Tis Cinclanut!— Call this no foreign town,"

But quickly came the answer In sweet, triumphant tone: "Ah, no; this is l'ompell; We're Gladens and ione." l kissed her cope for Glucous; Iudeol, l kissed her twice— The kiss I gove as Glaucus Some: w did not saffee.

The Questies.

At a religious meeting in America a number of females stood upon the benches, notwithstanding they were desired not to los so. A venerable pastor then arose and said, "I think if these ladies knew they bad holes in their stockings they world sit down!" Upon which there was a great fidgeting among the indies and an immediate sinking into their seats.

A young minister who stood behind the venerable gentiaman, hinshing up to the temples, said: "Oh, brother, how could you say that?"

"Say that!" replied the old mm. "Why, it must be a fact; if they had no hoise in their stockings, t should like to know how they could get them on."—Tir-Bits.

"At Lincoln hall on three evenings of neat week, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, the people of Weymouth and antrounding villages will be royally entertained." The coining occasion in the girand fair of Delphi Lodge, No. 45 K. of P. The knights and their "ladges faire" have been working for weeks and indeed for months preparing for this grand event, and the result of all this labor will be arranged in the hall on the three evenings aboved named. There will be tables laden with the namal fancy articles and many that are numeral, conrectionary tables, ice cream and cake tables, etc. all to be presided over by beantiful and obliging ladies who are warthy companions to the doughty and intrepid knights.

On Wednesday evening, will occur for for the first time in the annals of Wey-mouth's history, a famous trial by judge and jury. One of our prominent citizens will be tried for an aggravated, malicious both sides headed by James H. Film, Esq., for the compisinant, and Louis A. Cook, Esq., for the driendant. Both these gen-tiemen are famous for their previous large experience in assault and battery cases, in one capacity or another, and thua a witty tilt may be anticipated.

On Thursday evening there will be drama, "Among the Breakers," by a most excellent and experienced cast from North Weymonth. As this North Weymouth Dramatic Cinh is always good, and as the play itself in excellent no further comment

Will be necessary.

On Friday evening there will be a grand literary and musical entertainment and a supper, which want of space prevents na from enlarging upon here. But ga and be feasted, both in soni and body, with the good things of this evening and you will ever afterward be thankful that you were one of the favored on that oceasing You will want to be present Weilnesday avening for the great trial. You cannot possifily miss the frams un Thursday there is only one rational way to do-huy event of the season. If you do you will get dollars for cents in fun.

The following poetical contribution was among the tokena of regard; O, happy fricads whoso feet have trod Together all life's way. With glad and thankful bearts we hall Your golden-wedding day.

The autamn sends her greetings glad In all her goblen sheaves, And sheds her blessings on your heads With the falling of the leaves.

And more than garnered stores or hoards Of gens, your weath untoid! Lore's fires hare burned the stross away And left you but the gold. Not always in green pastures fair Doth tiod lile chloiren lead; "It is girea you to suffer" Thus in lile word we read.

Partakers thus with Him whose inve Did compler am and pain The victory that o'ercometh Through faith in Him we gain.

And in the sunlight of this day, Your joys and griefs shall shin Alike with the same golden glow, The light of love divino.

And side by sble these faces bright Which your very being thrill; You see the vanished forms and hear The voices that are still. And when the inving, willing hands, Whose ministries are ever given, Have ceased their tireless service here May they clasp again in Heaven.

So as you near life's farther gates Together still as one. The shining city comes in view Beyond your setting sun. The gold-paved city where you both

After Bell had exhansted bimself others spoke in the same vein, and all worked themselves up to a great pitch of excitement. It was midnight before the meeting was over and we returned to the preacher's house. The old man and his daughters were loud in their praises of what they called Bell's 'spiritual afts," and they hoped he would be sloved to talk again on the morrow. We all slept in the same room, my companion and myself having one of the large beds to correlves and the Misses Sleigh decupying one trundle bed and the idiot boy the other. As we prepared for bed in the dark all the proprieties were preserved, and with commendable modesty the young ladies stole ont before we were awake next morning.

The following day, Saturilay, still more mountaineers came down, and the services of the night before, including another sermon from my very remarkable companion, were repeated. There was no cooking done till after snaset, then the character of the people seemed to change. The men shonted like boys released from restraint and swore as if profamity were a positive comfort. The women sang and bandled coarse jokes with each other, and the younger and prettier ones—like their sisters the world over—showed a decided disposition to fairt.

The case of Ball and myself greatly firt.

The case of Bell and myself greatly interested these people, all of whom strongly advised against crossing the monntains to the west, or attempting to go into North Carolina along the Blue Ridge foothills. The passes were guarded by Confederate troops and the country was being scorred by squads of cavalry. They advised us to remain there till it was safe to move an, but while making this affer they did not attempt to conceal the fact that they were themselves far from being safe, and that it for some time, Mr. Bowman made a suggestion about as follows: "If I was sight ruther make for the Yankees than signt rather make for the Yankees than run the risk of bein 'rested by the Con-feds. The Yanks 'll Irent you mas all right; make you mas take the oath most like, and then let you mas go home and behave."

Such an arrangement was exactly with Bell's pet desire to get into western North Carolina, which was only a day's march away; but the enemy was in that direction. After pretending to deliber-ate, I told Mr. Bowman that I liked his idea, and that if he could put us in the way of reaching the Ynnkees we would way of reaching the langues we would start that hight. With a stick he amouthed out the ashes on the hearth and drew a map of the Chattahoochee river. Its sonres were in the counties and drew a map of the Cuarana and drew a map of the Cuarana and drew a map of the Cuarana river. Its sources were in the counties where the Yankes were then reported to be rabling, and if we did not fall in with them we could follow down the valley to Marietta, between which point and Atlanta we would be sure to find Sherman's army.

To my great relief, Bell fell in with To my great relief, Bell fell in with and Hank Bowman, a tall, and Hank Bowman, a tall, and Hank Bowman, a tall, and the relief to the sure to find Bell.

"Waal, I don't keer whose dog he is, I ain't a-gwino to be bit," responded Bell.

a state of great excitement, but, judg-ing from the celerity with which everybody moved, this was by no means a new experience. The cattle were driven luto the hills, and the men, nearly all af whom where deserters, prepared to fol-low, and were ready, if not eager, to fight. Old Mnn Sleigh's daughter gave us brend and meat sufficient for two days, and about midnight we said good-by to our kind friends and started off with Hank Bowman. How this young man, without a moment's cloudt, kept on averstreams, along valleys and across the wooded spars of the Blue Ridge, and never leaving the trail during the night, ranst remain among the most striking of my experiences on this long and varied murch to freedom.

Except for occasional stops to eat ar to batho our feet, we made no long halt that day. We met a number of moun-taineers, all of whom confirmed the retaiaeers, all of whom confirmed the report that the Yankees were near by, and this fact did not give them mearly the same concern that young Bowman's story did about the Confederates advaacing from Rahan. About the middie of the afternoon we came upon one Harden was about and the typical cabins. Umon man named White, whom, Ilank Bownan assured us, it would be entirely safe to tie to. As there was no lock to the door, there was no tromble in getting in; there was but little furniture inside, no sign of a bed, and the cold ashes on the bearth tobl that it had been some time since a fire was lit there.

This place was as far as tlank Bownman had "allowed to come." He assured in that white would soon show any name that we had "better hang round like" till he did, when it would be entirely safe to trust him. Beil had some Confederate money left, which he offered to share with the young man, but his name was Benton, that he came Union man named White, whom, Hank making this affer they did not attempt to conceal the fact that they were themselves far from being safe, and that it was only by constant vigilance that they succeeded in keeping their little snpply of food ont of the hands at the quarter-masters and themselves from being forced into the army.

On Monday night Mr. Bowman and two of his sons, all isboring nuder great excitsment, came to Old Man Sleigh's and reported that a body of Confederate cavairy was marching in this direction from Clayton, in Ranbun county, and that everybody who didn't want to be caught must get into hilding at once. One of the young men had come from Nacoochee that day and there learned that a large force of Yaukees were raiding toward Dahlonega, and that they had already cleaned ont Gilmer county and destroyed the town of Eilljay. These people have a very vagne idea of the meaning of the word "mille." They measure distance hy the time it takes to travel, and a place is either "not fur" or "hilt's a right smart distance." The

We decided after a long discussion to remain in the woods that night, for the artillery told that both sides were nea by in some force, and that there was greater risk of running into the eneasy in the darkness than of finding our friends. We found a secluded place on the jungle covered banks of a little stream that flowed into the Eiewnh, and there, after finishing the last of the food we brought from the Sleigh settle tood we brought from the Sieigh settle-ment, we lay down and were soon askep. We were very weary, and so daylight found as still lying in the bushes, where we might have renained for some hours more had we not been startled into

The thought that we might catch up with our troops the next day filled Bell and myself with an intense desire to be told the old story about our being fur-and myself with an intense desire to be moving. Still, we decided to concead onrselves in the woods near by and wait till the next morning, if need be, for White. We kept watch by tarns, but the night passed away without any sign of life in the little cabin. Before leaving the evening before Hank Bowman told us that about two miles south of White's cabin was the Etowah river, along which "that was right smart of gold mining," bathe cuntioned na sgainst the miners, somn of whom, he declared, would kill a man for a dolbar.

The coming of Mr. White was altogether nucertain, so after breakfast and

About a half mile from our sleeping place the creek flowed through a canyon with walls from twenty to sixty feet that was left we started off with the rising sun ut our backs. It was middle afternoon before we met anybody, and then it was in an unexpected way. We had just come upon a road that led in the direction of our advance when we heard yells in the distance, followed by the pounding of hoofs.

There were two or three men, not more, wu felt sare, in the party. So we steeped into the timber and walted. In a few minnets two horses were reined in close by, and with ularm in their faces the men tooked back in the direction from which they had come. They were boys, dressed in a cadet uniform and armed with carbines. Without consulting me Bell stepped into the road, and if followed. The young men tarned pale, beets, C. G. Sheppard, Rev. W. L.

which time we had returned to the fire and the hound had stopped his baying. The new arrival was, a young man dressed and armed like our lust, and his manner told that he was laboring under great excitement. He cause to report that Confederate soldiers, "afoot and on critters," were swarming in the hills and picking up every man they could find. That afternoon they had seized a dozen men known to Benton and Tom Billings,

"That's no better place to stick to than this," said Benton. "If the hounds iind us har thar ain't n place ia the Blue Ridge where it would be safe hidia. I'vo got grub enemgh to last all imuls for two weeks, and then, if it comes to a fight, I rerkon we four kin get awny with any other four they have a mind to Tom Billings "allowed" this "mout i ail so," but he very much doubted whether the search parties would send just four men; but, as he could not do better, he was willing to stay. The fire was quickly extinguished. It was arranged that we should each stand turn on guard, with an eye on the canyon, for that was the only direction by which moanted men could reach us.

The night passed without any cause for alarm. At my suggestion Benton had muzzled his bound and confined him

I looked up and saw six men pointing army.

We had learned from the sergeaut the that we were in Cherolles I looked up and saw six men pointing their rifles flown at us, and at the same time four mounted men rode up the canyon and called on us to surrender. Resistance was out of the question. The description of the question of the question of the properties of the prop men on the rocks came clambering down, our arms were selzed, and we

These nich were commanded by a sergeant, a soldierly looking fellow, who evideatly understood his business. I showed him the paroles of Bell and myself, which had so often stood as in good need, but their power to convince was gone. The sergeant, who belonged to the Third Georgia cavalry, expressed himself about as follows:

"Your payolic as a soldierly looking fellow, who evidently understand the veident that they could not stand that we could nake better time on foot, particularly us we were in the low of the proposition of the veident that they could not stand the veident that they could not

himself about as follows:

"Your paroles may be all right, and then, again, they may not be. But if they had been drawn up by President Davis and countersigned by General Lee they would do you no good. Why not! Well, because my orders are not to recognize furlonghs nuless the men who have them are slek in bed or so badly wounded that they can't hundle a roun." wounded that they can't handle a gun."

Benton protested that he was wounded, and Bell showed the still unhealed bullet wound on his right breast, but the sergeant was oldurate. He had orders and must obey them, and in addition to that the Confederacy needed every man in this thue. Hood had just been beaten by Sherman before Atlanta and it was the duty of every good southern man in Georgia to lasten to the defense of the belengured nrmy. And so Bell and myself, who had yowed to die rather than be recaptured, were ugdin priscuers, and to add to the horror of the situation we were about to be marched away to light ugainst our own people, for it would have been fatal to us if wo had told the truth.

There were no preparations to make. Benton was permitted to conceal his mining lools in the lant; then marmed, and with the gnard before and behind us, we were marched down the canyon and along the stream to the Etawah river, where we found a camp In which there were about 200 soldlers and as many more sullen monotainers, who had been gathered in by the searchers. My compoulon and myself reasoned that the very best thing we could do was to seem to full la with the spirit and design of our captors. The captain is charge of the camp was a young man in charge of the camp was a young man named Reese, and after telling him our story I said that, much as we had suf-fered and eager though Bell and myself were to go home, we would cheerfally go with him to Hood's army provided he treated as like men and not like pris-oners. He declared that this was his purpose, and that he was willing to show his faith in us by letting us ride the fol-lowing morning.

These Confederates belonged to Wheel er's command and were not authorized to collect the tax in kind, yet they had collected several inudred head of cattle and about eighty horses for the use of the army. As they gave receipts for all the property taken, their conduct did not perhaps violate the rules of war, but not perhaps violate the rates of war, but it served to intensify the lute of tho despoiled mountaineers.

The Confederates wers in good spirits, though I noticed that, from the officers town, all were outspoken in their de-I nuclation of Jeff Davis for retiring Abont wo clock that night we found a good pasture for the cattle on Battle creek and went into camp. By daylight we had hreakfast and were moving again. From the first Bell and myself had pinned ta save our horses without seeming to shirk our work, our object being to make a break the first chance we had. The second wish were accounted. men known to Benton and Tom Billings, and the chances were that they, too, would be taken the acxt day if they did not clear ont.

"That's no better place to stick to than this," said Benton. "If the honnds lind us har ther ain't a place is the Bine Ridge where it would be safe india. over the same ground.

In the course of the night it began to rain, and the next morning the creek along which we had herded the cattle mong which we had never the carries was a running flood with enough water in it to float a gunbout. Some of the cattle were on one side of this torrent and some on the other, and Bell and myself with two others were ordered. across to drive the animals over. We had to swim our horses, and as my companion could not swim I kept close to this side. With an oath he whispered to me, "I'd rather have a battery fire ou me than go back over that crik."

The extile we ware southfur anneared

The cattle we were sent after appeared to have as much dread of the flood as had Bell. They bolted into the woods, for alsrin. At my suggestion Benton had muzzled his hound and confined him to attract the enemy as it was ta warius of his approach. In the morning the dog was released, and as we were eating breakfast he ran down the caupen barking furiously. He had not been gone from sight for half a minute when a riffe shot echoed along the cliffs and we sprang to our feet. Before we could seize our arms a man shouted down from the rocks above the calim:

"Dou't dare to stir, boys! Yoa're covered."

In the afternoon the booming or gains could be heard in the direction of Atlanta, and the sound arged as on as a spar does a jaled steed. We had not eaten since morning, but although we could see lights after nightfall we decided to run no risks, but to go without feed for many lightfared by or till we food for a week, if need be, or till we reached our lines. We slept on the crest of n wooded hill, and with the first gleam of day we were np, but carly though it was the guns that had been silent daring the most were again booming in sal-len echoes along the hills. Keeping in the woods and shaping our course by the sound, we continued on till noon, when we met an old black man in the woods. He had a bag of cornmeni oa his shoulder, and he gave us some, which we ate raw, for it was thir ty honrs since we had tusted food. This man told us it was about ten miles to on us we were going, for there was a large body of Confederate cavalry be-tween us and our destination.
